

MORNING APPEAL.

Friday.....July 29, 1887.

MEDALS FOR BRAVE MEN.

The presentation of gold medals to Lorenzo Pinaglia, John McLain and William Scadden, for their services in rescuing men from the Gould & Curry fire was a well deserved tribute to individual bravery. These men faced the deadly gas and smoke of the burning mine, at a time when stout hearts and iron nerves quailed at the dangers presented. They were in all respects the equal of the men of whom Tennyson wrote,

Who thrice had plucked a life
From the dread sweep of the down streaming sea.
They did their work of rescue in the darkness, where lights could not live, and bore their senseless comrades to the cages amid the mantling folds of the death smoke that came withering up from the lower levels.

McLain, the engineer, faced the breath of hell when he stood at his post and saved a dozen lives. These three miners who were given medals for individual bravery are all quiet, mild-mannered men, who were never seen about Virginia City at night seeking for someone to tread on the tails of their coats. In times of real danger the blustering, quarreling element are always out of the way, and they stay out of the way.

SIZED DOWN.

The Salt Lake Tribune thus sizes down Cleveland:

"Without any disrespect to the office of Chief Magistrate of the Nation, it is only fair to say that President Cleveland's address on the respect due that office, delivered at Clinton on Wednesday, was mostly, in the lexicon of the compositor, 'hog-wash.' It was turgid and bungling in diction, and through it there ran a strain of complaint which is unworthy any incumbent of the office. President Cleveland has less real grounds for complaint of the treatment the people have given him than any other President. Wrong on a multitude of vital issues, he has never been more than gently criticised, except where his acts have permitted nothing less mild than denunciation. Up to seven years ago he had achieved no higher fame than that of a Buffalo ward politician. His existence was unknown to quite fifty-nine and half out of every sixty of his countrymen. Considering all the facts, it does not require a speech from him to impress upon the people the respect due the office of President."

—The World editorially says: "It is encouraging to hear that the President has determined upon an extended Western trip. It would have been a great advantage to Cleveland and the Democratic party if he had gone a thousand or two miles distant from Washington, from Massachusetts and from Wall street for observation of the country and acquaintances with the people a couple of years ago."

—Alex. Musser, of Wells, is on his ear, as it were, at the sudden and unexpected increase of his family. A married lady stopped at his house over night and became a mother before morning. Alex. says he is not in the "lying in hospital" and lady guests hereafter will be required to give satisfactory reference as to their marital standing before being admitted.—Independent.

—Texas has a statute which imposes a tax on drummers or commercial travelers from other States selling goods within the limits of Texas. The Texas Courts of Appeals has just pronounced this statute constitutional—a decision in direct conflict with the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court.

—It has just been discovered at Coner d'Alene that Chinamen have been paying their taxes in "doctored" gold dust.—Enterprise.

In this country the white pay in good money but they "doctored" their returns to the Assessor. It's about as broad as long.
